Many structurally diverse organic molecules contain phosphonate functionalities. The development of novel P-based tools for the synthesis of important drug molecules and biopolymers is an important goal for chemical synthesis. Biosynthetic routes to these compounds have been developed primarily by non-enzymatic approaches. The proposed research will provide a new route for the biosynthesis of a large class of biologically active compounds through the synthesis of phosphonate phosphonates and phosphinate phosphonates catalyzed by a newly-discovered NRPS enzyme. The research will provide a new way to synthesize medically important pharmaceuticals and biopolymers. It is anticipated that the new NRPS enzyme will serve as a versatile scaffold for designing protein biocatalysts. The NRPS enzyme will also be a valuable reagent for protein engineering by directed evolution and for the site-specific incorporation of unnatural sugars, amino acids, and other organic compounds into proteins and protein structures. Synthetic phosphonates are one of the most versatile classes of functional molecules, possessing numerous biological activities. It is hypothesized that phosphonates will be converted into new functional derivatives by biochemical reaction pathways, including the proposed synthesis of phosphonate phosphonates and phosphinate phosphonates.

At present, tunable filters based on mechanical systems are described in e.g., commonly-owned U.S. Pat. Thus, there remains a need for a tunable filter that is small in size, that is easy to manufacture and operate, and that has a resolution that makes it useful in filtering signals in the telecommunications arts, such as wireless communications.Forensic casework — including pitting a tire iron against a bloodied pillow — is putting children and parents in harm's way, a University of Colorado professor says. In the study, CU Boulder criminologist Dean VanMeter and colleagues found that in the past 15 years, there's been a "more aggressive approach" to cases where police investigators want to test evidence or take DNA from a crime scene. "And it's not just that. It's a real danger to kids," VanMeter said. "It puts kids and families in harm's way." The study, published Wednesday in the International Journal of Legal Medicine, found that in the past 15 years, the amount of casework that involved testing or extracting DNA grew from about 1,000 cases a year to more than 2,000 cases a year. Cases where this type of testing and analysis took place grew from about 40 percent of the cases over the 15-year period to almost 60 percent. Of those cases, 3 percent involved children younger than 5, according to the study. The emergence of that testing in forensic casework means, VanMeter said, that child victims are being swept into a "forensic crush." Children are involved in more and more forensic
